Langsomt strømmende vand

En sommerdag ved åen. Sidde på brinken med støvlerne dinglede lige over vandoverfladen. Bare betragte det strømmende vand på dets vej til havet.

Rundt omkring mig går naturen sin gang. Insekter myldrer lige over vandoverfladen. Svalerne kommer pilende med høj fart og snupper insekterne i luften.

En gang i mellem høres et plask. En ørred er hoppet op af vandet for at snuppe en flue. Er jeg heldig kan jeg se de smukke fisk glide forbi nede i åens mørke vand.

Lyden af den rindende vand er som musik i mine ører. En sagte klukken, hvor strømmen af vand rammer brinkens planter. Nogle krager på den nysåede mark medvirker i dette landskab af musik med deres monotone kra-kra.

Der sker hele tiden noget nyt. Små mikroorganismer, grene og grus hvirvles af sted gennem det brusende vand. Der hvor vandoverfladen er blank, spejles himlens skyer i vandoverfladen.

Hvornår har du sidst givet dig tid til at sidde på brinken ved en å og nyde naturen?

Slowly flowing water

A summer day at the small river. Sit on the riverside with the boots dangling just above the surface of the water. Just watch the flowing water on its way to the sea.

All around me, the nature takes its course. The insects are swarming just above the water level. The swallows pass with high speed and grab the insects in the air.

Occasionally, a splash is heard. A trout has jumped out of the water to grab a fly. If I am lucky, I can see the beautiful fish pass by down in the dark waters of the river.

The sound of the running water is like music in my ears. A gentle gurgle where the flow of water hits the plants on the riverside. On the newly seeded field some crows are involved in this landscape of music with their monotonous KRA-KRA.

All along, something new occur. Small microorganisms, branches and gravel are swirling through the rushing water. Where the surface of water is smooth, the clouds of the sky are mirrored.

When did you last find time to sit on the riverside and enjoy nature?
