Nordsøens kyst

Kysten har altid fascineret mennesker. Dette er stedet, hvor land møder hav.

Nordsøens kyst kan det ene øjeblik virke rolig og behagelig: Små fiskerbåde, der tager på fiskeri efter krabber nær land. Langstrakte og brede sandstrande med glade badegæster. Små solbeskinnede landsbyer bag klitterne.

Men kysten på vestsiden af Jylland kan det næste øjeblik virke truende og være farlig. Voldsomme storme, skummende bølger og et hav, der æder sig ind i landet. Huse, der opsluges af havet, fiskerbåde i havsnød, når fiskere undervurderer havets kræfter.

Jeg besøger ofte kysten i det nordlige Jylland. Selv om jeg har været på besøg et sted for ikke så længe siden, kan landskabet fuldstændigt have forandret udtryk fra gang til gang.

Det virker sundt at stå herude ved kysten og betragte den storladne natur. Som menneske får man perspektiv på livet – vi er som et sandkorn i den stormende vind – og vi vil altid være naturen underlegen.

The coast of The North Sea

The coast has always fascinated people. This is the place where land meets sea.

The North Sea coast may, at a given moment, seem calm and pleasant: Small fishing boats that go for fishing for crabs near land. Rather long and wide sandy beaches with happy bathers. Behind the sand dunes small sunlit villages.

But – the next moment -the coast on the west side of Jutland can be threatening and dangerous. Violent storms, foaming waves and a sea eating away land. Houses that are engulfed by the sea, fishing boats in distress, when fishermen underestimate the powers of the sea.

I often visit the coast of Northern Jutland. Although I have been visiting a place not long ago, the landscape completely can have changed the expression from time to time.

It seems healthy to stand out here on the coast and experience the great nature. As a human being, you get a perspective on life – we are like a grain of sand in the storm wind – and we will always be inferior to the nature.
