

FOR NATURENS SKYLD FOR THE SAKE OF NATURE

For naturens skyld

I disse år gendannes højmosen. Efter intensiv produktion af spagnum er dræning og bortledning af vandet stoppet, og måned for måned stiger vandstanden på de store flader, og højmosen bliver igen den dyngvåde svamp, som den var en gang.

Vådområderne her ude på højmosen er nu igen et eldorado for et imponerende, rigt dyreliv. Her mellem sivene kan vi opleve alle mulige fugle og andre dyr. Selv ræven, der ikke ynder at få for våde fødder, lokkes herud, fordi der er så mange byttedyr.

Jeg kender disse områder helt fra min barndom, men kun på afstand. Områderne er så våde og sumpede, at det er risikabelt at gå rundt derude. Men elgen, det tunge dyr, synes at være lige glad. Den maser sig igennem hvilket som helst vandhul, så den kan komme frem til de attraktive planter, der er dens favorit mad.

En dag håber jeg, at mennesket bliver lidt mere interesseret i at bevare naturen – for naturens egen skyld. Tiltagene i disse års fredning af mosen og genetablering er den rigtige vej. Nu mangler vi blot at fjerne nogle af de veje, der gennemskærer mosen, så området kan blive et stort sammenhængende naturområde uden biltrafik.

Der kan sagtens findes løsninger, hvor vi, der elsker mosen, fortsat kan betragte naturen på nærmeste hold uden at dyrene skræmmes bort. Vi behøver ikke at sidde i vores bil med seks cylindre, kørecomputer, sædevarmer, læderrat, kopholder og airbags iført det fritidstøj, der er langt bedre egnet til en gåtur i vanskeligt terræn, end til at sidde inden døre med den store teleskopkikkert pegende ud af forruden og med en kaffekop inden for rækkevidde.

For the sake of nature

At present, the raised bog is restored. After the intensive production of sphagnum, the draining has been stopped, and month by month, the water level rises on the large surfaces, and again the raised bog becomes the drenched sponge as it once appeared.

The wetlands on the raised bog once again serve as an Eldorado for an impressive, rich wildlife. In this habitat, between the rushes, we can watch all sorts of birds and other animals. Even the fox, which does not like to get too wet feet, is attracted to this place because the appearance of so much prey.

From my childhood I know these areas very well, but only from a distance. The areas are so wet and marshy that it is risky to walk around out there. But the moose, this heavy animal, seems to do not give a damn about the wet conditions. It pushes its way through any small pond to reach the attractive plants, which are the favourite food.

One day I hope that man will become a little more interested in preserving nature – for the sake of the nature. The initiatives in these years of preservation of the bog and the re-establishment are the right way forward. Now we only need to remove some of the roads that are intersecting the bog, so that the area can become a large unbroken natural resort without motor traffic.

I think, we are able to find solutions, where we, who love the raised bog, continuously can watch the nature without the animals being frightened. We do not need to sit in our car with six cylinders, driving computer, seat heater, leather steering wheel, cup holder and airbags wearing the hunting clothes, which is far better suited for a walk in difficult terrain, than to sit indoors with the large telescope pointing out of the side window and with a cup of coffee within reach.
