Et lille stykke natur

Den daglige gåtur. Jamen, her er jo intet at se. Jamen, her har vi jo lige været. Jamen, det regner. Jamen, det er koldt. Jamen, jeg skal noget andet.

Undskyldningerne er mange. Men min oplevelse af den lille daglige gåtur er, at det sætter perspektiv på hverdagen. Jeg tænker mere klart. Jeg får igen færtten, af hvad livet drejer sig om, efter at fjernsynets evindelige lokkende tilbud af serier, film, fodbold igen har lokket på afveje.

I min lille natur her i min hjemegn i Østhimmerland, tænker jeg tit på, hvad BBC-seere går glip af, når de ser de monstrøse serier om verdens natur. Selvfølgelig, det er smukke billeder, og seerne får også lidt ny viden foran skærmen. Men fokus er på natur, der har X-factor: Smukkere, større, sjældnere.

Hvornår kommer BBC-menneskene mon og filmer mit lille stykke natur? Så kan jeg vise dem de våde enge i disen. De kan få lov at se svampene og de forskellige lav på træerne. Hvis det skal gå helt vildt til, kan de sammen med mig sidde på åbrinken og betragte vandet, der i en evig strøm suser forbi under støvlerne.

A bit of nature

The daily walk. Well, there is nothing to see here. Well, it is raining. Well, it is cold. Well, I must do something else.

It is all very well to make excuses. But my experience of the short daily walk is, that it sets perspective on everyday life. I think more clearly. Again, I get the scent of what life is all about, after the television's constantly offerings of series, movies, football once again have lured into wrong ways.

In my bit of nature in my native East Himmerland, I often think about what BBC viewers miss, when they watch the monstrous series about the nature of the world. Of course, these series feature beautiful pictures, and the viewers also get a little new knowledge in front of the screen. But the focus is on X-factor nature: More beautiful, bigger, more rare.

When do the BBC people arrive to shoot pictures in my bit of nature? I can show them the wet meadows in the haze. They can see the mushrooms and the different lichens on the trees. If it is going to go crazy, they can sit with me on the steep bank of the small river and watch the water that in an eternal stream flows past under the boots.
