En kystlandingsplads

Den lille landsby ligger beskyttet bag klitterne. Vi er i Han Herred på Jyllands nordvestkyst.

For hundrede år siden lå der kun ganske få gårde og huse bag klitterne, men i dag består Slettestrand af mange helårshuse og endnu flere sommerhuse.

For hundrede år siden lå landsbyen tættere på kystlinjen, men år efter år bliver stranden bredere og bredere. Længere mod nord er det modsatte gældende. Deroppe gnaver havet sig år efter år ind i klinterne og landskabet bag.

I mange generationer har Slettestrand været et fiskerisamfund – men der er ingen havn. Slettestrand er hjemsted for en kystlandingsplads. I gamle dage blev bådene trukket op af havet med håndkraft. I dag sker det med tykke wirer og et stort spil.

Denne dag er bådene ikke gået til havs. De smukke træbåde står majestætisk og hviler på strandens fine sand.

A coastal landing place

The small village is situated, protected behind the dunes. We are in the district, Han Herred, on the northwest coast of Jutland.

A hundred years ago there were just a few farms and houses behind the dunes, but today Slettestrand consists of many permanent residences and even more summer houses.

A hundred years ago, the village was closer to the coastline, but year after year the beach becomes wider and wider. Further north, the opposite is true. Up there, year after year, the sea frets its way into the cliffs and the landscape behind.

For many generations, Slettestrand has been a fishing community – but there is no port. Slettestrand is home to a coastal landing place. In the old days, the boats were pulled out of the sea by hand. Today thick wires and a big winding gear are used.

On this day, the boats are not out at sea. Majestically, the beautiful wooden boats stand and find rest on the fine sands of the beach.
