Store tanker

Kalenderen fortæller, at vi er midt i maj. Men vi har sommervejr. Lige nu 23 graders varme midt på dagen.

Når jeg går rundt i min have, er der højt til den blå himmel og plads til store tanker. Jeg får den tanke, at de mange religioner, der som belønning for et liv i overensstemmelse med deres bibel, lover en plads i himlen, har et alvorligt problem.

Jeg går her rundt i en have. Fred, fryd for alle mine sanser. Hele tiden bringer naturen omkring mig nye overraskelser og gør mig glad. Jamen, er det her ikke den himmel, som troende bestræber sig på at opleve?

Jeg ved godt, at ikke alle i dette øjeblik kan få øje på det smukke og positive i deres omgivelser. I Palæstina og i Ukraine flænses Putins og Israels missiler, bomber og droner den smukke himmel. Når jeg tænker på det, får jeg en skyldfølelse af at glæde mig over min egen livssituation i forhold til den elendighed, krigen skaber for millioner af mennesker.

Nå, jeg er ikke teolog. Jeg må hellere nøjes med at være glad for min have. Måske skulle jeg allerede nu gå endnu en tur derud og få nye forunderlige oplevelser?

Big thoughts

The calendar tells us that we are in the middle of May. But we have summer weather. Right now, it is 23 degrees warm in the middle of the day.

When I walk around my garden, the blue sky is high above, and I find space for big thoughts. I get the thought that the many religions, which as a reward for a life by their bible, promise a place in heaven, have a serious problem.

I walk around in a garden. Peace, delight for all my senses. All the time, nature around me brings new surprises and makes me happy. Well, is this not the heaven that believers strive to experience?

I know well that not everyone at this moment can see the beauty and positivity in their surroundings. In Palestine and Ukraine, Putin's and Israel's missiles, bombs, and drones tear apart the beautiful sky. When I think about it, I feel guilty for enjoying my life situation compared to the misery the war creates for millions of people.

Well, I am not a theologian. I had better just be happy with my garden. Maybe I should already go out there somewhere and have wonderful new experiences?
