OVERVÅGET?

Lille Vildmose er på alles læber. Området er under genopretning. For få år siden var der spagnumproduktion på en stor del af arealet, og andre arealer var græsarealer for landbruget.

Men i dag er det et stort, fredet naturområde med et rigt dyreliv. I et stort område er der nu en mindre stamme af elge, og krondyr bestanden vokser for år til år. Fuglelivet er helt anderledes end i min barndom. Ørnene og tranerne er ikke længere et sjældent syn, og den røde glente har også indtaget mosen nu.

Lige nu er opmærksomheden hos de fleste rettet mod endnu et nyt dyr i mosen: Ulven. Et par ulve holder til i mosens sydligste ende i et område, der også huser flere hundrede krondyr og vildsvin.

Kun de færreste har set ulvene, men det er en ny fornemmelse at cykle alene på de lange veje i mosen med muligheden for, at en ulv betragter mig i det skjulte.

Ugens foto er billeder fra mosen i maj måned fra de seneste år.

WATCHED?

The bog, Lille Vildmose, is on everyone's lips. The area is under restoration. A few years ago, there was peat production in a large part of the area, and other areas were grasslands for agriculture.

But today it is a large, protected natural area with rich wildlife. In a large area, there is now a small population of moose, and the deer population is growing year by year. The birdlife is completely different from what it was in my childhood. Eagles and cranes are no longer a rare sight, and now, the red kite has also taken up residence in the bog.

Right now, most people's attention is focused on another new animal in the bog: the wolf. A couple of wolves are residing in the southernmost end of the bog in an area that also houses several hundred deer and wild boars.

Only a few have seen the wolves, but it is a new feeling to cycle alone on the long roads in the bog with the possibility that a wolf is watching me from its hiding place.

This photo of the week is pictures from the bog in May from recent years.
