Sommer i mosen

Det er sommer. Den danske sommer, hvor sol og varme veksler med dage med regn og torden. Inde i mosen er der nu for alvor travlhed. Mange dyr og fugle skal fodre deres kuld af unger. En andemor har fundet et vådt hjulspor ude i den store eng. Her er det svært at skjule de alt for ivrige ællinger. Nemmere er det for den andemor, der har fundet et sikkert sted i det stille vandløb. Alle steder er der masser af foder i form af de nyeste, friske, lysegrønne planter.

Ude i vildniset blandt siv og høje græsser står flokken af vildheste. De går tæt i flok. De hjælper hinanden med at rense ryggen for de irriterende, stikkende insekter.

Krageungen mosler hvileløse rundt. Egentligt er den blevet stor og erfaren nok til selv at finde føde, men det er nu en gang fortsat nemmere at tigge mad af mor og far.

Svaleungerne er blevet alt for store til deres rede. De er godt fedet op af deres travle forældre. Rådyret bevæger sig varsomt frem i kanten af det tætte krat. Den har sit rålam lige i hælene. Kronhjorten græsser ude på de store frie arealer.

Tranerne står langt derude på de våde sivmarker. De strækker hals og er på vagt. Deres langbenede unger løber derude et sted, skjult i den høje vegetation.

Buske og urter bidrager for alvor med deres blomster og frugter. Insekter og fugle spreder beredvilligt deres støv og kerner.

Joo, der er for alvor sommer i mosen. Ugens fotografier er fra Lille Vildmose i juli og august måned.

Summer in the bog

It is summer. The Danish summer, where sun and warmth alternate with days of rain and thunderstorms. Inside the bog, there is now a real bustle. Many animals and birds need to feed their broods. A mother duck has found a wet wheel track out in the large meadow. Here, it is difficult to hide the overly eager ducklings. It's easier for the mother duck that has found a safe spot in the calm stream. Everywhere, there is plenty of food of the newest, fresh, light green plants.

Out in the wilderness among reeds and tall grasses stands a herd of wild horses. They move closely together. They help each other clean their backs of irritating, stinging insects.

The young crow restlessly moves about. Actually, it has grown big and experienced enough to find food on independently, but it is still much easier to beg for food from mom and dad.

The young swallows have outgrown their nest. They have been well-fattened by their busy parents. The roe deer cautiously moves forward at the edge of the dense thicket. It has its fawn right at its heels. The stag grazes out in the large open areas.

The cranes stand far out there on the wet reed beds. They stretch their necks and are on guard. Their long-legged chicks are running somewhere out there, hidden in the tall vegetation.

Bushes and herbs truly contribute to feed the animals with their flowers and fruits. Insects and birds eagerly spread their pollen and seeds.

Yes, truly, it is summer in the bog. These photographs of the week are from the bog Lille Vildmose July and August.
