Naturen i marts

Disse dage i marts er vel som denne måned normalt plejer at være. Det er årets første officielle forårs måned. Dage med slud og isnende kulde, is på det stillestående vand og rim i græsset veksler med dejligt varme dage, hvor det føles vidunderligt at nyde en kop kaffe i solens varme på terrassen.

Naturen synes at vente utålmodigt på lysere og varmere vejr. Kåde spurve og mejser har travlt ved foderbrættet. Spurvehøgen kommer susende i dens overraskelsesangreb på de små godbidder. Vintergækken, krokus og erantis står i deres prægtige farver.

Hov, hvad er det for en lille dun-knold, der kom der. Åh, det er såmænd halemejsen, den nuttede lille skabning.

Ude i den store mose har alt virket dødt i de sidste vinterdage. Men nu begynder der for alvor at ske noget. Tranerne spankulerer rundt langt ude på de store enge. Mosens våde marker er fyldt med store flokke af gæs. Mange venter utålmodigt på flokkens samlede rejse til deres yngleområder langt mod nord i Skandinavien.

Forårsbebuderen over dem alle, viben, er også ankommet og lader sig se ude ved kanten af mosens store vandområder.

Nature in March

These days in March are just as this month usually tends to be. It is the year's first official spring month. Days with sleet and icy cold, ice on still water, and frost on the grass alternate with wonderfully warm days, where it feels delightful to enjoy a cup of coffee in the sun's warmth on the terrace.

Nature seems to be impatiently waiting for brighter and warmer weather. Playful sparrows and tits are busy at the bird feeder. The sparrowhawk swoops in for a surprise attack on the small treats. Snowdrops, crocuses, and winter aconites stand in their splendid colours.

Oh, what is that little fluffy ball that just appeared? Ah, it is none other than the long-tailed tit, that adorable little creature.

Out in the great bog, everything has seemed dead during the last winter days. But now, things are really starting to happen. Cranes are strutting around far out on the vast meadows. The bog's wet fields are filled with large flocks of geese. Many are impatiently waiting for the flock's collective journey to their breeding grounds far to the north in Scandinavia.

The ultimate harbinger of spring, the lapwing, has also arrived and can be seen at the edge of the bog's large water areas.
