Vandre i nysne

Min barndomsegn er denne morgen dækket af et tykt lag sne. Jeg vandrer en tur op på heden.

Kulden bider let i huden, men det første jeg mærker er stilheden. Sneen dæmper alle lyde. Ikke en vind at mærke. Landskabets ro forplanter sig til mit sind. Jeg føler samhørighed med dette barndommens landskab.

De gamle stier er skjult under sneen, men landskabets konturer fremstår klart under den hvide nysne. Hvert skridt jeg tager, laver et aftryk i sneen. Sporene vil snart forsvinde igen udvisket af varmen fra solens stråler.

De nøgne træers grene står sorte mod den lyse himmel. Med den lyse, hvide baggrund fremstår de som smukke, harmoniske strukturer.

Her, midt i stilheden, opstår en mærkelig form for klarhed i mine tanker. Den slags klarhed opnår jeg ofte, når jeg står alene midt i et landskab. Jeg oplever en indre ro. Jeg går videre af de kendte stier med en fornemmelse af lykke og fred i mit sind.

Walking in Fresh Snow

My childhood region is, this morning, covered by a thick layer of snow. I take a walk up onto the heath.

The cold bites lightly at the skin, but the first thing I notice is the silence. The snow muffles all sounds. Not a breath of wind to be felt. The calm of the landscape spreads into my mind. I feel a sense of belonging with this landscape of my childhood.

The old paths are hidden beneath the snow, yet the contours of the landscape appear clearly under the white, fresh snow. Every step I take leaves an imprint in the snow. The tracks will soon disappear again, erased by the warmth of the sun's rays.

The bare branches of the trees stand black against the bright sky. With the light, white background, they appear as beautiful, harmonious structures.

Here, during the silence, a strange kind of clarity arises in my thoughts. This is the kind of clarity I often achieve when I stand alone in the middle of a landscape. I experience an inner calm. I continue along the familiar paths with a feeling of happiness and peace in my mind.

The photos are from the turn of the year 2009–2010.
