Min have i maj

Rododendronbuskene, mirabellen, rødtjørnen, æbletræerne, hindbærbuskene, magnoliatræet – træerne og buskene i min have blomstrer og står i fuldt flor. Mine store bregner har nu foldet deres grønne blade ud, hvor den øverste spids dog fortsat ligner hovedet på en bispestav.

Hver morgen er der noget nyt på vej ude i haven og oppe i skovbrynet. Maj måned er en fantastisk tid.

Det er også en travl tid for havefolket. Køkkenhaven skal tilplantes og sås og der skal lues ud på gange og fliser og i blomsterbedene. Men giver man sig tid til dette arbejde, så er det absolut en positiv oplevelse at gå derude. Solen er begyndt at varme godt, sommerfuglene og bierne har travlt med at finde frem til blomsternes søde sager. Det hele akkompagneret af fuglenes ivrige stemmer.

Oppe i skoven er der drama. Solsorten og andre fugle giver alarm. Jeg formoder, at det enten er ræveungerne, der tosser rundt deroppe i skoven i deres vilde, kåde leg. Eller måske er det ugle ungerne, som solsorten forsøger at skræmme væk med dens advarselsskrig?

My Garden in May

The rhododendron bushes, the cherry plum tree, the red hawthorn, the apple trees, the raspberry bushes, the magnolia tree — the trees and shrubs in my garden are blooming and standing in full bloom. My large ferns have now unfurled their green leaves, though the top tip still resembles the head of a bishop's crozier.

Every morning, something new is emerging out in the garden and up by the edge of the woods. The month of May is a wonderful time.

It is also a busy time for gardeners. The vegetable garden must be planted and sown, and weeds need to be cleared from paths, paving stones, and flower beds. But if one takes the time for this work, it is truly a positive experience to be out there. The sun has begun to warm pleasantly, while butterflies and bees are busy finding the flowers' sweet treasures — all accompanied by the eager voices of the birds.

Up in the forest, there is drama. The blackbird and other birds are sounding the alarm. I imagine that it is the fox cubs racing about in the woods in their wild, playful games. Or perhaps it is the young owls, which the blackbird is trying to drive away with its warning cries?
