Møde i nabobyen

På arbejdet oplever de fleste af os at skulle til møder ude i byen. I byer i nærheden eller måske møder i andre landsdele. Det er en overkommelig rejse. I bil eller med offentlig transport.

På jobbet i Grønland er det noget anderledes. Selv transporten til nærmeste by er en oplevelse, som sætter sig fast i sind og sjæl.

I den sydgrønlandske kommune, Kommune Kujalleq, er hovedadministrationen for kommunen lokaliseret i den største by, Qaqortoq. Kommunen omfatter foruden Qaqortoq to andre mindre byer samt elleve små bosætninger. Kommune Kujalleq's areal er på størrelse med Schweiz, og størstedelen af kommunens areal omfatter isdækkede områder og øde bjergområder med dybe fjorde.

Et møde i kommunens næststørste by, Narsaq, kræver planlægning. Enten skal der sejles, eller også skal turen foregå i helikopter.

Afstanden i luftlinje mellem Qaqortoq og Narsaq er på kun 22 kilometer. Men hvilken rejse! Fra den lille Bell 212 helikopter med plads til ni personer, er der udsigt til snedækkede bjerge, dybe fjorde med store og små isbjerge.

Det er en flyvetur på femten minutter, men en rejse, som vi husker resten af livet.

A meeting in the neighbour town

At work, most of us experience to have a meeting out in the city. In cities nearby or perhaps meetings in other parts of the country. It is an affordable journey. By car or by public transport.

On the job in Greenland it is somewhat different. Even transport to the nearest town is an experience that gets stuck in mind and soul.

In the municipality of South Greenland, The Municipality of Kujalleq, the main administration of the municipality is in the largest town, Qaqortoq. In addition to Qaqortoq, the municipality includes two other small towns and eleven small settlements. The area of the municipality Kujalleq is the size of Switzerland, and most of the municipality's area includes ice-covered areas and deserted mountain areas with deep fjords.

A meeting in the municipality's second largest town, Narsaq, requires planning. Either the distance must be sailed, or the trip must be by helicopter.

The distance in the air route between Qaqortoq and Narsaq is only twenty-two kilometres. But what a journey! From the small Bell 212 helicopter with nine seats, there is a view to snow-capped mountains and deep fjords with large and small icebergs.

It is a 15-minute flight, but a journey that we will remember for the rest of our lives.
