Havblik

Det er en kold dag i april. Temperaturen ligger et stykke under frysepunktet. Der er næsten ingen vind. Fra den lille helikopter har vi udsigt til et snedækket landskab gennemskåret af mørke, blå fjorde.

På store strækninger af flyveturen mellem Qaqortoq og Narsarsuaq i Sydgrønland er der havblik. Vintersolen spejler sig i havoverfladen.

Vinterens storme har revet havisen i stykker. Isen flyder nu rundt i abstrakte mønstre, ført af vinden, tidevandet og strømforholdene.

Nogle steder må der være en vind, der fejer gennem bjergdale og ud over fjorden. Der danner sig i passager små bølger, der bryder spejlbilledet.

Calm sea

It is a cold day in April. The temperature is well below freezing. There is almost no wind. From the small helicopter we have a view of a snowy landscape traversed by dark, blue fjords.

On large stretches of the flight between Qaqortoq and Narsarsuaq in South Greenland the sea is calm. The winter sun is reflected in the surface of the sea.

The winter storms have torn up the sea ice. The ice now floats around in abstract patterns, led by the wind, tides and conditions of currents in the fjord.

In some places there must be a wind sweeping through the mountain valleys and beyond the fjord. In passages small waves are formed. The small waves break the reflection.
