Island

I maj 2006 fik jeg lejlighed til at besøge Island. Det var et besøg tilrettelagt i forbindelse med mit arbejde i Grønlands Selvstyre. Målet var at se og få erfaringer med storskala råstofprojekter i form af aluminiumsværker med tilknyttede vandkraftværker.

Netop på det tidspunkt var der seriøse overvejelser fra en amerikansk koncern om at investere i etableringen af aluminiumsværk i Grønland.

De islandske værter var som sædvanlig yderst hjælpsomme og havde fået planlagt et større program for vores besøg. Først i Reykjavik og nærmeste omegn og derefter på østkysten, hvor jeg og en kollega fik stillet en bil til rådighed til besøg ved aluminiums smelter og vandkraftværk under etablering.

Heldigvis blev der også lejlighed til at se noget af den islandske natur. Billederne i denne serie er af fugle og rensdyr på vores rundtur.

Iceland

In May 2006, I had the opportunity to visit Iceland. It was a visit organized in connection with my work in the Government of Greenland. The goal was to see and gain experience with large-scale raw material projects in the form of aluminium smelters and their associated hydroelectric power plants.

At that time, there were serious considerations from an American company about investing in the establishment of an aluminium smelter in Greenland.

The Icelandic hosts were as usual extremely helpful and had planned a major program for our visit. First in Reykjavik and the surrounding area of the town and then on the east coast, where a colleague and I were provided with a car for visits to the aluminium smelter and a hydroelectric power plant under construction.

Fortunately, there was also the opportunity to see some of the Icelandic nature. The pictures in this series are of birds and reindeer on our tour.
